

authentication/authorization

The session layer is responsible for keeping track of the authentication & authorization information of the client application/users, so that the server application can permit the clients to access the application

2. session management

2.1 The session layer keeps track of the number of packets send by the client and number of packets received at the server application

2.2 re-ordering the messages at the server-side to construct the data/information back